Description The Kickstart window opens in the center of the screen, but Snowberry opens in whatever position Windows assigns to it. Each time the window is opened, it moves lower and to the right until the bottom and right borders are off the screen, then it resets and opens in the top-left of the screen.  This is purely a cosmetic issue as no options are obscured and the window can easily be moved, however I think it would look more professional if it was centered on the screen.  Labels: Launcher

Snowberry is to be phased out and replaced by internal/runtime configuration.

Frankly I'd call this a windows bug more than a snowberry bug, Windows should be assigning an intelligent position to new windows.

But on that note, I don't want to see snowberry always opening centered when using a real window manager that actually places it properly.
